

Raising Kids Who Love Learning:
How Risk, Resilience and Relationships
Help Children Embrace Learning

Wednesday, October 29, 2014 - 6:00 to 8:00 p.m.
at Abraham Erb P.S. - 710 Laurelwood Drive, Waterloo

Do you worry about your child's academic achievement? Is your child worried about grades or test scores? Does your child resist going to school at times? Do you struggle to get your child to do homework, practice skills, or even seem interested in learning?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, or are simply concerned about supporting your child's learning experience, this evening will be of interest to you. In this workshop, we will shift the focus from achievement and 'products' to the process of learning. As a parent or educator, you will learn practical skills to help children become excited about and open to learning. We will discuss how exploration, risk-taking and failure build resilience and help children develop important life-long learning skills. We will also explore how relationships—parent/child, teacher/student, classmates/friends—create motivation for and openness to learning. Come ready to share your thoughts with other parents.
